

What is TSA?

Last Updated Monday, 19 May 2008

TSA is a non-profit national student organization devoted to teaching technology education to young people. TSA's mission is to inspire its student members to prepare for careers in a technology-driven economy and culture. Over 500 high schools and middle schools from across the United States compete against each other every year at the National TSA Conference. However, getting to the National Conference is no easy task. Each competitor must first win at local and state levels before moving on to Nationals.

TSA has over 50 different technology-driven competitions available, across a broad range of topics, from Manufacturing Prototype to Transportation Modeling to Electronic Research to Video Game Design.
